Remaining work to be completed for the next phase of the project ("Beta")

The remaining work that needs to be done revolves around modifying how we handle location services, as well as pulling the correct fields from locations using the google places API. Currently, the app requests location permissions and collects the users location, but has no good way of updating the location once permission is granted. Our future solution will need to be some kind of timer which refreshes the location, but this may need background services to be integrated. Furthermore, we need to clean up how our preferences interact with the placesAPI, as calls to the API are not free, and the placesAPI uses specific fields such as sushi_restaraunt that we need to pull.
